NEWSCASTER: Speaking of the economy, now business. You know, we have a lot to show off in the Portland-Vancouver area. And Barbara Voit reports we're doing it.

REPORTER: They're called site selectors. Think of them as scouts for businesses looking to relocate. Recently the Portland Vancouver Regional Partners hosted selectors from Arizona and Chicago. Executive Director Pamela Treece says they came with a wish list.

PAMELA TREECE: A climate that supports business, a positive workforce shed. They look for positive relationship between the elected officials and the businesses. And we could demonstrate all those things for them.

REPORTER: Treece disputes the notion Oregon's not business friendly.

TREECE: First of all, it is a perception. It's not necessarily reality.

REPORTER: The group visited Boeing in Gresham, the new Troutdale complex and the Nike campus.
